About the area

Geographe Bay is located in the South West of WA around 220km southwest of Perth.

The bay was named in May 1801 by French explorer Nicolas Baudin; Baudin named the bay after his ship, Geographe. The bay is a wide curve of coastline extending from Cape Naturaliste past the towns of Dunsborough and Busselton, ending near the city of Bunbury. The bay is protected from the rough seas of the Indian Ocean by Cape Naturaliste, which makes it a popular destination for recreational boaters. The bay is extremely shallow, limiting the entrance of large ships. To alleviate the problem the 2km long Busselton Jetty, the longest in the southern hemisphere, was built.

The area is bordered by the magnificent Margaret River wine regions. One of the worlds premier wine regions famous for its amazing wines, gourmet food industry and spectacular surf beaches.
